The sense of unreality does not leave me for a long time, since I first realized that knowledge I got unfortunately has nothing in common with the reality.

What am I talking about? I will try to explain. I want to confess my naivety. When I was working on this project I was thinking about many different things but could not even imagine that the main obstacle will be in people's unreadiness to accept it.

I assumed that it will be enough to be a qualified doctor to help patients with headaches to get rid of this pain with an easy, safe, cheap and physiologically proven method.

I should confess, I was mistaken. The funniest thing is that trying to understand a heart of the problem how different diseases occurred, I got the results but it has its own value. The matter is I changed a path, inconvenient and dusty one, that other people were using. People on this path are all different but they believe the road is the right one in spite of apparent discomfort. While I in the search of a breath of fresh air made a step to a side, then another one and one more. And then I was free, walking on the grass, breathing freely, the sky is unbelievable! The endless column of tired people is passing by. It is a sentimental talk but I feel myself exactly in this way. The most annoying thing is that nobody can hear me. I am not looking for sympathy, I just want to find an excuse for my next words.

The paradox is in people willingness to find a miracle but when they encounter it, they get frightened. Thus any unusual things especially the ones aimed at common good, are often seen negatively.

The specialist I am working with upbraids me for writing in a wrong way. "You have to write for ROBOTS, use more words that can be met in retrieval requests, then ROBOTS will like you and they will lift a website to the top. It is like a good supermarket in a forest where nobody will find it".

I will right 3 lines of this abracadabra for you.
